Three Men Blackjacked and Shot at James Thompson; Strike Ranks Broken by Mill Owners' Offer.

LAWRENCE, Mass., March 4.—An attempt made by three men to kill James P. Thompson, an organizer of the Industrial Workers of the World, and the failure of the strike in return to work in response to the overtures made by the mill owners, were the chief features of the day's events.

The attack on Thompson was made in his room in the Marlborough House. He was taken to the hospital, where he is now recovering from his wounds. The police are working on the theory that the attack was made by three men who had been blackjacked and shot at by Thompson.

The strike in Lawrence is now broken. The mill owners have offered a new contract to the workers, which includes a 10% increase in wages and a 40-hour week. The workers have accepted the offer, and the strike has ended.

PILGRIM SQUAD STARTS TODAY FOR THE SUNNY SOUTH

BOSTON AMERICAN SPORTING NEWS

King's Pilgrims are to have the same weather in Augusta, Ga., as the Giants have fallen foul of in Martin, Tex. they might as well stay in Boston. When they get away tonight they will have to carry off everything from Summer flannels to Winter furs. A Mizzard put the Giants out of commission.

Major expects to hear this week whether the Boston & Albany will establish a station at Fenway Park. The railroad officers are eager for the baseball business but don't know whether they can accommodate it at the South Station in the high hour from 6 to 8 o'clock. The terminal is nearly overtaxed now and it may be several years to use the station, which was built for just such purposes.

Train service from South Station and Fenway Park would be a boon to commuters who use the South Station and to downtown baseball fans generally. The Boston Elevated plans to run special tracks from the Ipswich and Brookline yards down to the park and the trains being considered. This will provide for the crowd influx from Washington street.

John D. Ward has not put in an order for an extra supply of baseballs at Augusta. Since he has been at the training camp he has studied his team's batting averages and finds that the new Pilgrim players are likely to put the ball over the fence much less often for the time being. When the pill gets out of South down in Georgia you never see it again.

"Look Cy," Young looks up his grip at Hot Springs tonight and starts the bike for Augusta. As a conscientious trainer, Cy is an object lesson to the recruits. He has never missed in early conditioning in all his twenty years as a baseball coach. "A man is never so good that he can neglect himself and he is never so old that he can't learn," said Cy to the writer a few weeks ago. "When I joined the Boston Nationals last summer, the chief concern was how to get me and I studied every batsman as if I was new to the game. I used to go around and pick up all the information I could get even from the youngest men on the team. I learned more from the beginners than many a beginner is willing to learn from an old timer. The successful men in any business are the ones who are always trying to learn more." As Cy has been about as successful a man as baseball ever produced, his tip ought to be worth something to baseball recruits and to youngsters in business as well.

The Red Sox may have discovered something "new" in Anderson, who is working faithfully at Hot Springs and who seems to be in playing shape, already, notwithstanding two years' lay-off. Anderson has been practicing on sick leave since he quit baseball, but has kept in trim and broke into the game as well as if he had never left it. The work at Hot Springs has made the Red Sox bunch pick up their ears and open their eyes.

Bill Carrigan and Jake Stahl look fat and heavy in the first picture of the Boston bunch training at Hot Springs—published exclusively in the Sunday AMERICAN yesterday. Stahl needs a long season of hard work after a year in his lair. Carrigan always reports heavy after a winter in the cigar making industry down in Maine, but he never has any trouble losing the surplus.

Charles F. Elyon, who referred the Atwell-Kilbane bout, has just sent a letter to Boston telling how Atwell lost the battle and the feather-weight championship. "Atwell went down to defeat with his colors bled to the mat," says Elyon. "He was defeated by a probably the fastest young man on his feet that the boxing arena has ever seen. While I do not wish to detract from Kilbane's victory, I must say that Atwell's fight was nothing like the effort we have seen this morning's pugilist put forth in years gone by. He seemed at times to be unaided to the floor. He failed utterly to live up to his reputation. Reports in regard to Atwell having gone back are fully justified by his performance."

Princeton Football Hero Out for Nine to Start Playing

Sam White, Fall River Boy, Will Be Mainstay in Fight for Tigers This Season.

PRINCETON, N. J., March 4.—Sam White, the most talked of football player in recent years, today got out of his lair. White, who was injured last season, and started spring training. The Fall River boy is in the condition and will be the mainstay in the line for the White this year. A squad of fifty men are out for the team, but little will be known until the first game in the spring. Coach Clark and Captain Storck expect to have one of the fastest sides ever turned out at Princeton.

THOMAS KEADY NAMED TO COACH AT LEHIGH

THOMAS KEADY, formerly coach of the Dartmouth College football, basketball and basketball teams, now located in Wakefield, has been named to coach the Lehigh University football team this spring. The former Dartmouth coach and coach has had many offers to coach that school and other teams, but he has declined them all. He has accepted the Lehigh position because he has been offered a salary of $10,000 a year. There have been talks at Princeton of securing Keady in December to coach the Princeton team.

TUFTS PLAYERS OPEN FOURTH WEEK IN CAMP

AL ELYON IN RAMPAGE IN PN TOURNEY

It was a fortunate strike of the bowling committee in selecting the New Boston Bowling Alley, No. 147 Washington street, Boston, for the site of the elimination, semi-finals and final of the Boston AMERICAN Bowling Championship contest, as from every side there was received endorsement from the bowlers on duty in the committee's selection of the alley.

Bowlers are furthermore pleased that the committee has selected the New Boston Bowling Alley, No. 147 Washington street, Boston, for the site of the elimination, semi-finals and final of the Boston AMERICAN Bowling Championship contest, as from every side there was received endorsement from the bowlers on duty in the committee's selection of the alley.

In deciding on the New Boston alley, the bowling committee not only took into consideration the central location, but being convinced to reach by either the trolley or the subway. The alley is a fine one, and the bowling committee is well satisfied with the choice.

Three and a half hours after the start of the contest, the bowlers are well satisfied with the choice. The alley is a fine one, and the bowling committee is well satisfied with the choice.

All bowlers who rolled 800 or over in the preliminary of yesterday—208 in all—were eligible for the elimination round. This includes the very best bowlers in the city.

Desperate Desmond

A Drum Is Made to Be Beaten, but the Villain Isn't Built That Way

Copyright, 1912, by the National News Association

By Hershfield

Claude Reclaire, hero, and his beautiful Desmond are overjoyed to see the villain Desmond securely in the hands of the revolutionaries of the revolutionary party. The villain is known to be a man who will receive no mercy treatment from the revolutionaries. At last there is a chance for the lovers and little Philip to escape from China and get back to peaceful happiness in America.

The letters of the revolutionary party have hit upon a plan that will not only punish Desmond severely, but will at the same time prove of some benefit to the party. The villain is compelled to push the heavy drum all along the route of the parade, while the sturdy drum-player lets an occasional volley fall upon Desmond instead of the drum-head. This saves one of the party from a disagreeable task and its punishment enough.

As Desmond toils along with the drum he does not allow his attention to be taken off some chance for escape, even when the drum-player, down upon the side of the drum, is making a noise which, owing to the cramped position he occupies under the weight of the drum, but his observant eye spots a manhole in the street and he is quick to slip into it. The astonished drummer goes tumbling over, head first and Desmond laughs a cruel laugh.

The disappointment of the drummer, while planning to Desmond, is far from enough to satisfy him. So, reaching up from the manhole, he seizes the drum and pretends to haul it back down the line at market. As the heavy drum rolls along it will knock over Claude and his friends of the revolutionary party before they have time to escape from the path of this maniacal avalanche.

Claude and Desmond, walking happily along among their Chinese friends of the party of progress, are suddenly knocked over by the drum, which is falling upon them at every roll. Over, too, on the ground, they lie by this apparently crazy drum, which bounds from the form to another in its mad career. The villain's hastily formed plan has proved strangely successful, and the recently gorgeous parade is now a line of prostrate figures.

"In the boy!" cries Desperate Desmond, "read on China and out now!" The very accidental villain has killed the Oriental, and in the confusion has managed to capture Desmond and his friends. Desmond, who is in his power, while the revolutionaries try to extricate themselves from the mass, Claude is sorry now that he sided with the users and wishes that he had left politics alone while in China anyway. Tomorrow we shall see Desmond's next villainy.

Two Intruders.

"Vill to him who evil thinks," proceeds to the other side of the

to the extent Mr. Adamson was a true Englishman. Her every in the opposite side to avoid that had to do with evil, and consequently

she thought no evil of any who preceded her.

For this reason the prospect of spending a night in Paris with a man who was her husband but was usually as near as his shadow did not come for the highest, exterior.

It was simply a matter of time

before she would be a joke than anything else. They would go down to the morning and join their friends, and that would be all of the incident.

It was hardly to be expected that Mr.

Adamson's French maid would hold the most altruistic of the men of the men. The notion on her part might have been "evil" to those who have the sense to avoid the appearance of it. And Pauline was a much older woman. She had become Mrs. Adamson's nurse and had been with her for some time.

She was, therefore, in the service of a man who was a great university for the life. So, when she confronted a strange man entering the parlor of the apartment from the outside door, she was not at all surprised that it was an intruder. When he had to be dropped from trying a door that led to an adjoining apartment she was not surprised.

When she had finally bunched him

Pauline was worried and not for the reasons. She was worried for her husband. She was worried for her

husband. She was worried for her

husband. She was worried for her

husband. She was worried for her

husband. She was worried for her

husband. She was worried for her stared at him and she exclaimed, with a little shake of her head. "I cannot go to bed yet. I'm not a bit sleepy. I have a lot to do. I have a lot to do.

Yellow shawl on the lamp! Light! And those heavy curtains! It reminds me of a photograph—it looks like the place I remember. She engaged into a corner of the sofa before she went to her room here. Make me, you, Pauline, and do my hair."

If you had seen Peggy Adamson at that moment—or if you had ever seen and talked to her for an hour—she would have understood why Pauline felt more than a prudent than Pauline. As she sat in the light in a soft, glowing dress, she showed every curve of her delicate body, and her hands were so white and soft, and her eyes were so blue and deep, and her hair was so dark and smooth, and her face was so pale and fresh, and her voice was so sweet and clear, and her whole manner was so graceful and charming, that it was no wonder that she was so popular and loved by all who knew her. And it was no wonder that she was so successful in her work, and that she was so happy and contented in her life. And it was no wonder that she was so loved by all who knew her. And it was no wonder that she was so successful in her work,

and that she was so happy and contented

in her life. And it was no wonder that she was so loved by all who knew her.

The Conferences Are the Hopeful Signs of Industrial Peace Between Mill Owners and Strikers—Ettor's Release Cannot Enter Into the Com- promise, as That Can Only Come Through the Courts

The first break in the dark clouds which have overhung Lawrence for seven weeks occurred when the mill owners made their first offer to compromise with their employees upon certain terms.

The strike committee has met and has rejected these terms, but this does not mean that progress is halted.

The mill owners gave further proof of their intention to recognize the great public interest in this situation by inviting the representatives of the strikers to a conference, which invitation the strikers accepted. This conference did not result in an agreement, but still another meeting is planned.

All this spells peace in the end.

As good traders neither party is probably willing to reveal their best terms at first, and it is to be expected that some continued negotiations will be necessary before final settlement is reached.

There is nothing in the rejection of the terms offered by the mill owners to discourage those who have hoped to long to see peace reign once more in Lawrence, unless it is the statement of Mr. Haywood that no settlement could be made until Mr. Ettor is released from jail.

The AMERICAN feels that this is a hasty declaration by Mr. Haywood, made in justifiable heat at the outrageous treatment which his colleague has received and is now receiving. But Mr. Haywood and the strikers must appreciate that the mill owners cannot enter into an agreement to release Mr. Ettor.

That release must come through the courts.

However much the strikers may believe the mill owners to be responsible for Mr. Ettor's unjust incarceration it is none the less true that they would not now be able to release him. We can often sow winds which we cannot restrain.

The AMERICAN is confident that the strikers will believe that we speak as a friend of justice to Mr. Ettor when we say that it is useless to make his release a part of the terms of settlement. If such a thing would happen it would be a scandal upon Massachusetts such as not even those who condemn the treatment of Ettor would be willing the State should suffer.

Mr. Ettor can be released in due course of law, and his treatment can be made such an example as will prevent its recurrence.

Mr. Ettor will not then have suffered in vain. The fact is that the assault upon Mr. Ettor's liberty has done inestimable service to the cause of the strikers, for it has stirred to indignation the intelligent and thoughtful people of this State and of the country wherever the facts are known.

If now the strike can be settled upon the material issues in the controversy—the question of wages, and premiums, and overtime—the object of the strike will have been accomplished and Mr. Ettor will have received his share of the credit and gratification, both for his leadership while he remained free and for the good which public opinion, aroused by his treatment, did for the cause of his followers.

The AMERICAN has not ceased to denounce the conspiracy which resulted in the temporary loss of liberty to Mr. Ettor and the unjustifiable action of the police at the railroad station, and every other arbitrary and unlawful trespass upon the rights of the strikers.

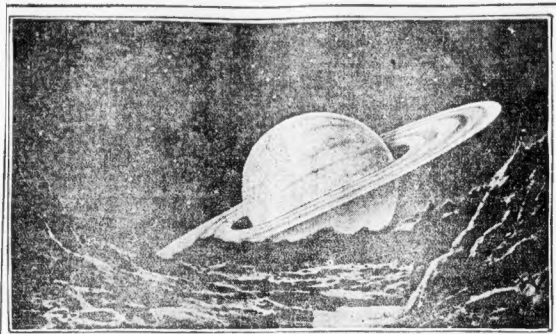

Therefore, the AMERICAN feels that it can with good grace urge the strikers not to confound their general cause with Mr. Ettor's case, because it will not help Mr. Ettor out of jail a moment sooner, and because if persisted in it will prevent any settlement of the strike, since it is asking the mill owners to do that which they cannot do.

The AMERICAN does not advise the strikers to abandon the cause of Mr. Ettor, but to fight for him even more vigorously than they have already fought, and the AMERICAN assures them that it will not cease to be interested in the Ettor matter until full justice has been done him.

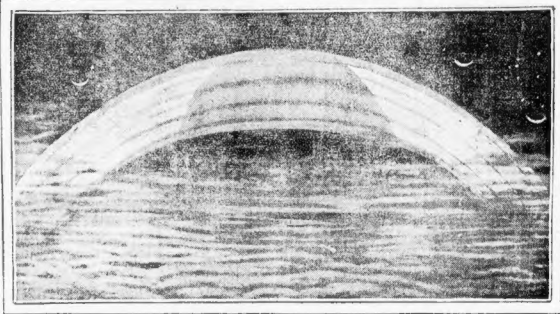

Let us hope that both sides will be fair and friendly, giving and taking as much as possible, and that ill temper and animosities and recriminations will not jeopardize a final, peaceful settlement of this serious situation.

Saturn as It Would Appear to Us if We Could Stand Upon Its Nearest Satellite and Watch It Rise Above the Horizon of Jagged Peaks.

Saturn Hidden by the Clouds, but Its Shadow Thrown Across Its Rings by the Sun's Light.

The most imaginative writer of stories never in-visioned anything half as wonderful as the world that surrounds our planet Saturn. It is in plain view, west of Mars and the Pleiades, but you must get some one who knows the sky to point out its place to you, and you must have a telescope to see its wonders. But our pictures will show you what it is like.

Look first at the view which shows it in a dozen different positions in its path around the sun, which it takes nearly thirty years to traverse. It is nearly ten times as far from the sun as the earth is, and, looking at it, you would see a small, distant, ringed planet, entirely out of account, it is seven hundred and sixty times as large as the earth.

These proportions are so gigantic that they could not be truly represented on a sheet of paper. The earth, at "E," is shown twenty times too large, and the distance from the sun is three times too great in proportion.

You will observe that the view shows Saturn in a variety of different positions. These positions it assumes in regular succession as it goes round the sun, and the various aspects that it presents are practically the same, whether it is looked at from the earth or from the sun. The seeming changes of form are due to the fact that the rings are tipped up or down at an angle of about 27 degrees to the plane of its motion round the sun, so that when it is on one side of the sun the southern surface of the rings is in the sunlight, and when it is on the other side, the northern surface comes into the light.

When it is half way between these positions, the rings present their edges toward the sun and the earth, and then they almost disappear, because in spite of their vast extent they are very thin, probably not over a hundred miles in thickness. Thus, as the picture shows, in 1911 they were seen edge-wise, in 1899 their northern side was exposed as widely as we can ever see it from the earth; in 1907 they were again edge-wise, and in 1913 their southern side will be exposed at an inclination of 27 degrees. At the present time the telescopes show the northern side as it appears in the first figure to the left of 1914.

Saturn has ten satellites, some large, some small; some millions of miles away, and some quite close to the outer edge of the rings. These satellites may be imagined to carry inhabitants, and the astounding spectacle that Saturn would present as seen rising, setting, where it gathered strength, and the horizon of the nearest of the satellites, is represented in the second view.

From a point nearby, the immense globe of Saturn would appear tremendous and would seem to cover almost a quarter of the sky. It would cast a strange golden-orange radiance over the landscape, and probably be able to project the swift motion of the whirling rings would be visible.

We know that they are composed of millions of relatively small bodies. He does not want her to marry him, and many of them, it is possible, gradually grow up to make herself unpopular with both sexes by repeating the compliments she receives.

He is possessed by beauty, and whatever she does she looks at her and pays her court and tell her how lovely she is to behold.

A mother is the only woman who can really enjoy hearing another woman tell her of her own beauty, and she has received, and the other woman must be her daughter.

Mothers who possess certain permanent qualities, and who are not easily changed by the triumphs of their daughters.

But such mothers are the exception to the rule. There are many women who enjoy knowing their friends are admired, and who are not easily changed by the triumphs of their daughters.

And then his abundant gain assured him that these creatures have a sphere of sensibility and intellectual enjoyment far superior to that of the in-habitants of our earth.

Ill Temper, Like the Waves of the Sea, Go Onward, Gathering Strength at Every Turn and Causing Trouble for All

When the wind goes

What it knows howling?

Who knows where it came

From when it began?

No one knows, for the reason that

It never stops blowing, and as it is always blowing, and always has been blowing, perhaps it never began.

The state of the world that lies on the shore at your feet is its influence, and the state of the world of the universe is its influence, and it is not important that you know

all about a little personal action of nature, its rights, its destination,

and that it is in your power to control

it when it reaches you.

Listen. Where this wave begins we do not know, but it reached the coast
